"During that time [late 1960s]; the fish were so big and healthy. But today everything is different. Near Diiicho [Big Island]; the fish are small. I lived here all my life and I've seen changes. ... In the last two years a lot has changed. Fish are smaller."

"The fish is our main source of food so we have to have respect for the fish. Sometimes it is hard to shoot a moose or other animals. Tòdzì is very smart and hard to see them. If you want to shoot a tòdzì you really sneak around to get them. Or they will see you first. ... That is why people survive most on fish for food."

~ Joe Champlain, 2017

Recommendations

Continue respectful harvest of fish by the community while allowing fish populations to recover
